Have you ever seen some birds flying by in "V" form? Have you ever wondered where they are going? Yes, you are right. They, and many other birds, are migrating.

The word migration comes from the Latin word "migrates" which means "to change". This word has a particular meaning when it refers to animals. Migration is the movement of an animal from one region to another. Birds usually migrate twice a year, in spring and autumn.

During the long summer days, birds have more time to feed their young babies in the north. But when autumn comes, the days grow shorter. And the birds understand that in the cold winter days, they can't find enough food to live. Therefore, they start to migrate to the south.

Some birds eat along their way, but some birds eat more just before migration. These birds store the energy in the form of "fat" in their body. They know that they might not eat for several weeks as they migrate!

1. What does the word migration mean in Latin?
