Halloween comes from a very old celebration. It began with the Celts, people from Ireland, Britain, and the north of France. Every year, they celebrated the Day of the Dead on November 1. On the night before, October 31, dead people came back to life, they thought. The Celts left food outside their houses for the good dead people. But the Celts wanted to scare away the bad dead people, so they put on scary faces. Later, when the Romans arrived in Britain, the celebration changed. It changed again when people in the United States, Canada, and Australia started to celebrate it. In these countries today, children wear special clothes and go to their neighbors' houses. When the neighbors open their doors, the children shout, "Trick or treat!" The neighbor has to give them candy or the children will play a trick on them. A lot of people decorate their houses and make them look scary. Some people play scary music, too.
